

Could Kent Island's South End Be Reforested? A Transplantation Experiment
Colin Tiernan, Class of 2017

Kent Island's southern end had a forest. How long ago that forest stood alive and well is currently uncertain, but in the 1930s large clusters of barren, ghostly stumps covered substantial portions of the southern half. Only a few of those stumps stand today.

Why did the forest