

embodied the people they portrayed. I hoped to develop a similarly character-driven show and weave a plot around the core of characters I created.

I began my summer watching other one person shows and observing how those solo performers addressed audience engagement, pacing, and storytelling. I watched autobiographical shows such as Heidi Pitlor's What the Constitution Means to Me as well as fictional shows such as Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe.

to embody a variety of ages and personalities. The quasi-protagonist of my show was one of the first to be developed: a New York City native with a strong accent and a stronger will who owns a doggrooming salon in town. She carried with her the central conflict of the show, namely that after uncovering ic. I finished the summer with twenty scenes and a basic outline of the culminating, and very chaotic, final town hall meeting. I enjoyed my creative research this summer and I am excited to continue editing the material in preparation for a performance of the show this November.
